(b) THE CONTROL OF STRUCTURE IN VEGETABLE LIFE Biological lore is full of the transformation of structures to serve various purposes; and this adaptability is seen more convincingly perhaps in vegetables than animals. No better example can be found than in the various duties performed by the stipules of leaves, those little winged appendages that are so often seen where the leaf springs from the main stem. They are by no means always present and often appear to serve no particular purpose. In the rose they look like little teeth. In the beech, the lime, the elm, they are represented by the brown scales that protect the young shoots and fall away as soon as the leaves have broken through them. In the edible pea, where most of the leaves change into tendrils wherewith to seize support from stronger neighbours, the stipules become enormously enlarged, so that they are actually more important than the leaves themselves in the plants economy. In the sweet pea they are not so big because the true leaves are relatively larger. On the other hand in the red-berried bryony the stipules become tendrils to climb into neighbouring hedges. In the common dock and rhubarb they unite by both margins and form a tube that protects the young leaf--In the hop the stipules of opposite leaves unite and split down their centre, thus forming the brown scales that lie between the leaves. Indeed we cannot by any means always understand the adaptations of structures, especially when the only purpose served is that of symmetry and colour. But for that matter it has yet to be shown that beauty is not a function in developmental needs, and that mutual service between species, if only in
