Not illustrated. 1881 Excerpt: ...on our voting-paper in the order of our preference. We have to think upon them; we have to put them down upon the votingpapers: and that alone would have a high intellectual and moral effect. Why were the ancient Athenians so intellectual? Because on account of the continual elections they were always taking an interest in public affairs. If we adopt Hares system, our political education lion will be as excellent as was that of the ancient Athenians. There is one other advantage I will mention. If Hares system were adopted it would give the very best men in the country for representatives. It would procure for our representatives the very (lite of the community. That is not the case now. Why? There are various reasons. Men of the highest character under the present system will not come forward and contest seats. We have an example in America. It is notorious that first-class men there will not betake themselves to public life. It is the same to some extent iu the colonies. If we do not get the first-class men, do we get the second-class men? I am afraid not. Why? The wire-pullers bring forward men of what sort? The first-class man is out of view. But, of all possible men, we might suppose that the party will get the best possible man. They never do so. Let us suppose a contested election. What takes place? Let us say that 750 persons form the constituency: 350 of them are Conservatives, and 350 are Liberals. There are 50 who do not declare themselves--who ride upon a rail--50 trimmers watching the chances, pretending to be more conscientious than any of the others, and that they have not yet made up their minds. The election depends on the 50. The Conservatives cannot take their best man, because, if they do so, the 50 will vote against them. It is the sa...
